

Sometimes I can be alone outside.

Someone I don't know can approach me and say that she/he will help me, that my mother has called, or that I should go with her/him.

When someone I don't know approaches me and asks me to go with her/him, she/he can hurt me.

When a person I don't know wants me to go with her/him, I have to say "no" and walk away.

Then I have to tell this situation to a relative.

When someone I don't know approaches me and asks me to go with her/him, she/he can hurt me.

Thus, when a person I don't know wants me to go with her, saying "no" to her and walking away are very important behaviors.

If I say "no" to someone I don't know for her/his offer to go with her or help and walk away, my relatives will be very happy because it is safer.
